

A few of the comments received after a screening at USC's Keck School of Medicine ...

The film does a beautiful job of portraying the medical and social aspects of migraine. In medical school, we unfortunately brush off just how debilitating this condition can be. Given the prevalence of migraines in the country, more time needs to be dedicated in our curriculum to this condition. (USC Med Student)

As a medical student and prospective neurologist, this film has been invaluable for my education and my understanding of migraine. I am so grateful to have heard these stories. (USC Med Student)

OUT OF MY HEAD successfully educates about the public health relevance and the patient experience with migraine. As a medical student, I think healthcare students and professionals would benefit from seeing this illuminating film. (USC Med Student)

The film brought attention to migraine through the eyes of several different points of view that helped me empathize more with the population that is severely underserved. (USC Med Student)

The film is a great educational tool to share the story of those who suffer from migraine. It is a platform for patients to share, for friends and family to understand, and for healthcare providers. (USC Med Student)

Was very interesting and enlightening. It related to me on a personal level. I think it is important for healthcare providers to see. (HCP)

I never knew the symptoms of migraine were so severe. The film was excellent. (Nursing Student)
